

Feed in dry times – Get prepared early

It's important you have a plan if dry conditions are forecast for your region. The planning you do beforehand can make a real difference later. Support is available to help you prepare and get through.

Talk it through

There are many people to talk to for advice on your situation and possible options available.

- Beef + Lamb New Zealand – beeflambnz.com
- DairyNZ – dairynz.co.nz
- Federated Farmers – fedfarm.org.nz
- Deer Industry New Zealand – deernz.org
- On Farm Support – mpi.govt.nz/on-farm-support
- Your local veterinarian

These organisations all have experienced professionals who understand the challenges and can provide advice.

Get help with feed planning

Getting a plan in place can help give you peace of mind.

Having a feed budget can help you:

- Calculate your feed demand
- Calculate your feed supply
- Investigate options to fill feed gaps
- Proactively make decisions.

Support is available from your local veterinarian, farm advisers, industry organisations and specialist services.

Key actions

- Plan for feeding your stock over the coming months.
- Be aware, you may have extra stock to feed if there are delays at meat processing plants.
- Talk to your livestock agent or meat processor early to book in animals for destocking.
- Look to increase supply of feed or reduce animal demand.
- If buying feed – act early. Order supplementary feed now while some is available.
- Work with your veterinarian to identify and prioritise animals to get off-farm earlier if necessary.
- Seek help if you're under pressure. There are people who can support you.
- Try Farmstrong – A nationwide wellbeing programme for the rural community: farmstrong.co.nz
- You can call or text 1737 to talk with a trained counsellor for free, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

Neighbours and friends

Talk to neighbours or farmers you're close to in your community – they may have feed you can use or space for extra stock. They may also have useful advice or a trusted adviser to help you find solutions.

Your local veterinarian

Your vet can help with the key information needed for planning – especially pregnancy scanning and body condition scoring. They can also provide nutritional advice (including for supplementary feeding), advise on animal health and welfare, and advise or assist with humane culling where required.

Other trusted advisers and rural professionals

- Check your budget and talk to your bank if needed.
- A farm consultant is a great source of advice.
- Talk to your feed merchant. Increased demand for some supplementary feeds, including domestic grain and imported feeds such as PKE, can lead to delivery delays. It's best to plan ahead.
- Talk to your stock agent or meat processor and understand the length of any anticipated delays. This will help you plan for feed and your animals' welfare.
- Nutrient companies have teams who can help.
