There needs to be more emphasis on a effective, connected public transport network in Dunedin. That means drivers that know what they're doing (ie how to properly drive the bus, how to issue a transfer, how to actually be courteous) and a map that is usable...

The status quo isn't good enough. Even if patronage is increasing there are still too many problems wiyh drivers not knowing what they're doing and unusable information.

Additionally, I ask that the ORC does they're absolute best to work constructively with the DCC, like they've done in Queenstown. There are too many cases of bad cooperation between councils in Dunedin.
